TO

MISS KATHARINE S. BOWERSOX

Who came to Berea in 1907 as alliance dean of women, and has served in that capacity ever since. Generations of Berea girls remember her for her friendship and her loyalty to high ideals . . .

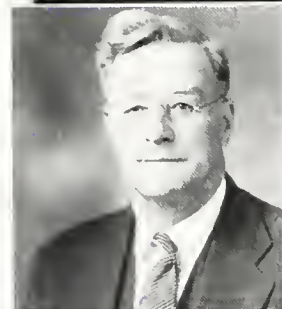

DR. JAMES WATT RAINE

Who has been a member of the faculty since 1906. As head of the English Department, he has succeeded in preserving and enriching the mountain culture of which our students are so much a part . . .

MISS JESSIE MOORE

Miss Moore has served Berea in a number of ways since 1912 . . . first as matron of the Boarding Hall and later head of the home science department. Since 1920 she has directed the life of Boone Tavern, making it a distinctive hostelry . . .

IRA D. SHAW

Since 1924 Professor Shaw has guided the prospective teachers of Berea that, through his criticism and help, they might be better prepared to meet the problems of education today . . .

MRS. DILLIE WERTENBERGER

Mrs. Wertenberger came to Berea in 1914 and taught for a number of years in each of the three schools. In 1927 she became assistant manager of Boone Tavern, where her lasting attachments with students and guests contributed both materially and spiritually to the growth of Berea . . .

CLUB

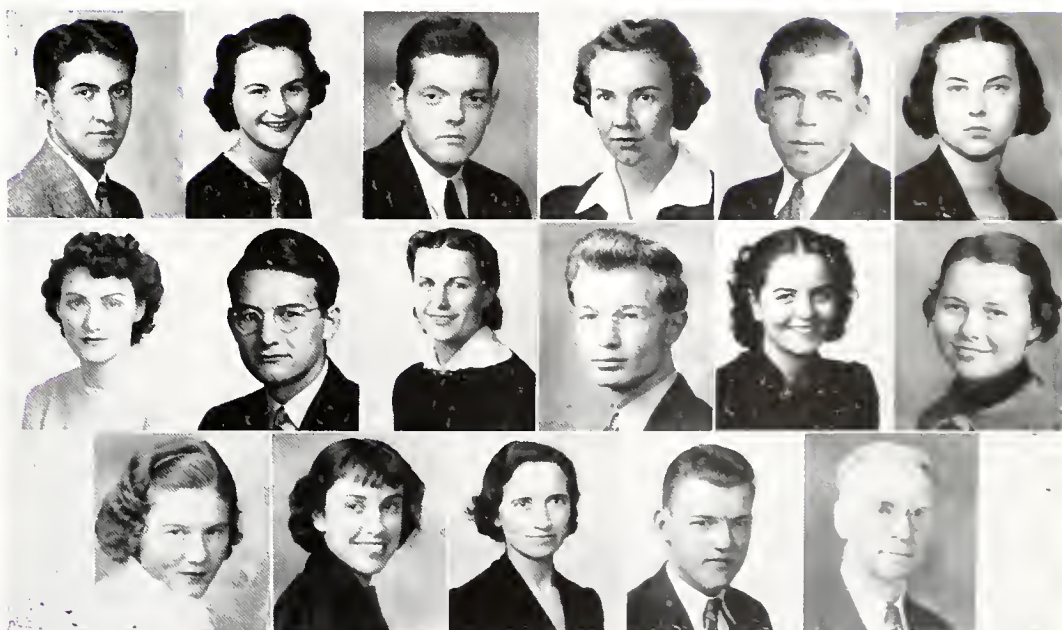

THE CHASTENING

The Dramatic Club has carried out its usual program of play production with a great deal of success and has expanded into new fields this year. In addition to its regular full length plays the Club has presented one-act plays at the Tuesday night meetings throughout the year.

The annual fall production of the Club was the Helen Jerome dramatization of Jane Austen's "Pride and Prejudice." Dr. James Watt Raine was assisted in the direction of the play by Miss Maxine Wooten. "All of A Sudden Peggy" was the spring play, and its double cast worked under student directors Frances Lillard and Mayme Hensley.

With the assistance of Miss Emily Ann Smith and Mrs. Charles Morgan the Club presented Charles Rann Kennedy's "The Chastening." "Everyman" was presented to the public later in the spring and "Job," written by Dr. Raine himself, was again produced.

PRESIDENT'S HOUSE

CREATIVE WRITING

Artists speak through other mediums than written language. The Class of '39 is glad to reproduce here a cut by Mabel Henderson. The Theme is "Climbing Jacob's Ladder."

The Class of 1939 believes that the written expression of the Berea students of the past year is and should be an integral part of our annual. Therefore, we continue the creative writing section as instituted by the Class of 1937. This section makes no pretense to include the best writing done in Berea this year. It does include, however, some of the significant written thoughts from the several schools throughout the year.

(Editor's note: Miss Nellie I. Crabb, librarian, has published a volume of poems, Seeking, released this past fall by Henry Harrison, Inc., New York. Since Seeking is the literary event of the year for Berea, we have persuaded Miss Crabb to honor our creative writing section with a poem.)

WHEN NEW DAWN COMES

I search the darkness, wishing day were here
Until the rooster sounds his ancient horn,
And then I hear the baby, newly born,
Release its natal cry, both weak and clear.
His tiny hands surround the broken sphere
That came from Time—a strange and awful gift.
His curling fingers tighten; see them lift
His present, knowing neither joy nor fear.
I feel remorse but cannot change its shape,
Nor can I help him bear its heavy weight.
Its broken edges are not mine to mend.
I let it fall to seek my own escape;
Regret has reached my heart too late:
His earthbound day is dawning—mine must end.
—Nellie I. Crabb

CANDLELIGHT

I think, in this soft candlelight
That I have found something tonight
I have not ever known before—
Peace, beauty, light. . . and something more.

UNCHANGING

For seven years now I have shuttled between here and the rolling hills of the Blue Grass—seven times in September and seven times at Christmas—and the Pinnacle has always welcomed me when I returned. At first it is only a part of the Appalachians that stretch their blue miles in the distance, but slowly the road becomes hilly and devious and we become a part of the blue mist and sloping hills. We round a curve suddenly and the Pinnacle stands before us—sharp, tangible, and friendly—and I am home.

We climbed it first in spring when the air was heavy with moisture and the good smell of damp, stirring earth. Climbing frantically for the top, clutching at the rocks and limber trees, panting hard, laughing occasionally at nothing. And reaching the summit we clung to the rough rocks and looked below. The fields stretched themselves over the hills in quilt-like patterns of squares and triangles, strung together by the slick, black road. The soft mist of hills in the distance shaded indefinitely into the horizon.

How many times I have climbed it since I do not know. Vague, poignant memories of Mountain Day haunt me—laughing voices, friendly, helping hands, and cameras clicking; crisp, yellow leaves, and crumbly, moist earth beneath our feet; grape vines thrusting their gnarled branches into our paths, sharp briars; bushes with red berries, and acres of goldenrod.

And night memories, too—when the bright moon hung above the Pinnacle, etching it in yellow light, and the trees were brittle and black. The limbs cracked as the wind tore through them—wind that straightened our hair, plastered our clothing to our bodies, and forced us to clutch frantically at the cold rocks.

Ten years from now I shall return. Other things will have changed and I shall be a stranger in a strange land. But I can depend on the Pinnacle. Its majestic beauty will greet me from out of the blue mist—and I shall not be entirely friendless.

—Mary Belle Waits

NIGHT

Night has laid its misty curtain down
And sights, familiar once,
Strangely, now appear.
Each line, edge, and sharp divide
Softens. . . . melts. . . .
To form vague shapes in black and gray.
The hill alone stands high
And makes a line across the sky.

—Clarence Steinberger

MY FRIEND

By chance, we shared
The self-same course,
And for a space
We drank of life
From a single cup.

Now we are parted;
Each our way has gone.
But when again we meet,
In simple words we'll say
"My friend."

—Clarence Steinberger

“LOOK HOMEWARD ANGEL”

I am happy in America. And yet, there is something that draws me to my native village in Russia. I want to watch the slow creek whirl against the clay bank where swish the willows that bring back the smell of sandals, newly-woven out of willow barks, and where the burbling bullfrogs echo the haunting childhood fear from the depths of the green pool. Beside the pool, it was believed, long-haired Medva crouched in the thicket ready to spring at swimmers without crosses on their necks, whom she tickled in the ribs and then strangled among the frogs. I want to stroll along the crook of the wagon road where grandmother Vassilchenko hobbled after a scampering group of children, threatening with her birch stick, “I’ll report you to the Pope for picking my cabbage leaves!”

I want to feel the soft earth in which we played jacks with red, green, and blue pigs’ knuckles. I want to be present in the street again through which the first tractor caterpillared, whose mysterious loud rumble hurried the villagers from their work—with pitch-forks, rakes, and hoes—to view the “monster bumble-bee.” Then, no matter how far I go, there are always my relatives. And though I may be very different from them in many ways, in their faces are peculiar lines and angles which have a magnetic familiarity.

That sun-parched village seems strange and remote to me now. But, once in a while, there is the smell of sauerkraut about my nostrils, the savor of hot “borsh” in my mouth, and the eternal silence of the steppe in my ears that make me forget America, and pull me to return.

—Vera Dudina

QUERY

An old, dead tree, (lightning-struck, perhaps),
Stands alone in the pasture
Lifting gray, rain-worn arms against the sky,
Still hoping, faith undestroyed.

God, is it really better to keep hoping like this
Even after all hope is gone?

—Harold Hackett

CLOUD-SCARF

Tall lady,
Queen of the mountains,
The cloud-scarf you wore at dawn
Has slipped from your head and is draping
Your shoulders.

—Nellie I. Crabb

When you are tired of playing
With the words I said,
And laughing at the silly,
Tearful dreams I shed,
Don’t try to give them back to me;
They are already dead.

AN INVENTORY OF FRIENDSHIP

That was seventeen years ago. . . .

But the same narrow path winds in and out among the stately trees. Long since unused, it is now overgrown with mountain laurel and tangled grapevine. But it is the same path—that leads to the old mill pond.

The old pond is silent tonight; undisturbed, peaceful except for a low muffled ripple in the millstream. I kneel on the turf and dip my hands in the refreshing water. That is what we used to do when we would wander off down that path. On warm nights when the moon was high and full, we used to steal off down here. . . just to dip and splash our bare feet in the water.

The pond is still here; and just over there she lies; her grave sunken and filled with leaves and covered with a wild rose briar which has twisted and entwined itself about a worn, battered headstone, now dislodged and lying to one side. But age and weathering have not obliterated all its markings; across the top is still discernible:

"To you, my friends: Be brave and strong
And help another friend along."

She bestowed upon all the sisterly love she gave me. She thrived on friendship. It encouraged her, made her happy, and cheerful, and gave her a smile that will haunt me forever.

When she was twelve I gave her a little red book bound in gold and called "An Inventory of Friendship." In it she wrote the names of all her friends. It was ever in her possession, for she was constantly filling in new lines, ever posting new milestones.

In the stillness of the night I am left alone with my dead one; some mysterious radiance showers itself from the jewel-heart of slumber. Whispers haunt me—in my dreams we are again the two happy youths who strolled that path in another day.

The veil of darkened hours is drawn aside; the radiance is diffused. And again I see her . . . in deeper vesture. . . the same dear heart. At her bosom dangles a golden stylo; in her hands she clasps a little red book bound in gold. And, inlaid in gold across the front is "An Inventory of Heaven." For every now and then, you see, an old friend drops in.

WHEN THE SAP IS UP

(Accepted for publication by the American Poetry Magazine in March, 1939)

When maples bud and their sap is lush and a fire is burning in every bush—among the leaves a bob-white rustles—
what is the urge that ripples my muscles?
What is the word that leaps to my tongue
when April shouts and May looks young?
Again I wade in the mountain water and kiss the farmer's red-haired daughter.

—James Prince

FUTILITY

The rocks on the pine wooded point
Are all splashed by the raging waves
Which still lash out though the storm is o'er.
Now I, all broken and spent,
Know the folly of the sea.

—Clarence Steinberger

MOSAIC

This is a fragment of Eternity;
I must not mar its perfection,
But make it scintillate with beauty
To add loveliness
To the great mosaic of days,
Each bit so fragile,
So easily broken or marred;
I must take care the pattern
Is not blurred or patched.
The dark days are a gentle, soft background
For the exquisite brilliance of the other days—
Dark days are beautiful—
It is the broken days that leave jagged scars.

—Daisy Lee Fuson

ACCENT

The maple tree
At the foot of the hill
Is wearing her summer's
Green dress still.

But one red leaf
Adds a daring note
Like a knotted scarf
At a gypsy's throat.

THOUGHT

Cupped within my hands
You lie,
O beautiful, sacred thought.
A silver pool of mercury
Glis'ning in a holy light.
Yet as I watch,
You slip away.
Lost among Things,
Your million fragments
Are not found.
So I lift my hands
Into the light
And pray.

COLD CORNBREAD

Old man Bill Jones hobbled down the narrow, crooked mountain trail. The sun was getting low and he was somewhat troubled. He was late for dinner. If Mary, his wife, detested anything, it was to keep dinner waiting. He hurried.

At home the dinner was cold and Mary's manner was colder. From experience Old Bill knew that he was treading on dangerous ground. He decided to move warily until he thought up a really good excuse.

Soothingly he began to talk. "Mary, I know that I'm a no-good, worn-out, worthless old cuss. I haven't got an ounce of grit in my backbone. Why, I haven't even got a backbone, or I'd appreciate these fine dinners you cook me and get here on time."

Mary said nothing.

Self-pity wasn't going to work this time. Bill could see that. Flattery came next.

"I stopped up at Sally Brown's and she asked me to tell her your recipe for pickled apples. Said she liked your apples better'n anyone else's in the valley."

Even flattery failed this time after working successfully for twenty-five years. Bill had only one other possibility.

"I stopped at Jake's. The baby's here. You should see Jake trying to put a diaper on the squirming, little red-faced brat. It sorta takes after . . ."

Mary's cold manner faded immediately. Grabbing Bill by the arm, she pushed him toward the table.

"Eat your dinner, Bill Jones. Why didn't you tell me about the baby instead of trying to soft-soap me. Jake don't know a thing about babies! He might try to put the diaper on its head! What is it, anyhow, boy or girl? Oh, never mind. Go on and eat your dinner, and while you're at it, I guess you might as well wash the dishes, too."

Tying on her bonnet, Mary rushed out. Old Bill sat down contented to his meal of cold cornbread and buttermilk.

RECIPE

Our vesterdays of long ago
Grow sweet and mellow with the years,
For memory shines the happiness
Like gold, and just forgets the tears.

So let's pretend we're years ahead
Where memory's rose—and—amethyst
Blots out at once the pretty things,
And see each day through golden mist.
—Daisy Lee Fuson

METEOR

A golden thread of thought
Slipped through the fingers of my mind;
I failed to catch the end and tie it fast,
And now it's gone.
Forever?
Who can say?
Perhaps some day
Like the threads of light
In a comet's tail
It may flash back again
More brilliant for the waiting;
But, too, mayhap the light
Will have faded and dimmed a bit—
If it ever comes again.

—Daisy Lee Fuson

A straight, fair child.
The waves crept softly up the shining sand
And nibbled gently at her feet.

LUCAS

My friend, Lucas, lives down in "America's Economic Problem Number One." He is a farmer and one of those much-talked-of creatures known as 'share croppers'. Although some would say that Lucas is just "damn lazy", some would say he is afflicted with abulia, some would say he is sapped by hookworm, some would say he is a shiftless, unsatisfied dawdler, my close acquaintance with him would not allow me to agree with any one of these accusations. His way is a way of life—an attitude toward the world he drags about in.

Everybody knows how Lucas gets about
With his head and his arms hanging down.
Everybody sees him as he goes and comes,
For he sticks pretty close to the ground.
And you don't have to say what he's thinking about,
For he shows it with every step—
Come easy—go easy—God, send Sunday.

The storm gods know that Lucas don't care
If they put his patience to test.
And the rain gods know that a rainy week
Will only bring Lucas more rest.
And grassy cotton don't bother him,
Or else he don't show it much, just—
Come easy—go easy—God, send Sunday.
—D. B. Robertson

SILVER BIRCH TREE

You are so straight and slim
With your smooth body glistening in the sun,
So white against the blue.
You are so proud, so glad,
With your long arms stretched ever upward
To catch thin winds and fling them lightly.
To your staid neighbors, the oak trees.
You are not vain,
Else you would bend your head
To see your image in that small, clear pool
A rain of yesterday left at your feet.
I'm glad you are not vain;
I like you better straight and slim,
Flung upward.

—Ruby Greenwell

STREET LIGHTS

The night is dark and the street is wet
With a softly falling rain;
The street lights glow in a yellow row
Like flowers along a lane.

And coming home through the silver mist
With a cool wind in my hair,
I cannot help but lift my face
To whisper a little prayer—

Dear God, when the night is dark and long
And the path is dim with pain,
Let hope and faith shine through the dark
Like street lights in the rain.

FIVE TIMES A STUDENT

Mary Jane came to school just five times in her life—the first day, three Fridays, and the day of the Christmas tree. Though she wasn't old enough to be enrolled, I knew her as a teacher knows a favorite pupil.

When I called the first grade class, she came with them. Sometimes I let her count for me or tell about the picture in the primer. She knew who Tan was, and Jack, and Nell, and could tell the story of each page.

At recess, Mary Jane used to think she was reading nursery rhymes. She got the big green Mother Goose book from the library, stuck her legs straight out to hold it on her lap and flapped the pages expertly until she found one Blanche had taught her. With her bangs in her eyes and a moist finger racing back and forth along the lines she recited:

“Diddle-diddle-dumpling! My son John
Went to bed with his britches on
One shoe off and one shoe on.
Diddle-diddle-dumpling! My son John!”

Berkeley had a tiny yellow ball he lent to the little children to keep them out of the big boys' way on the playground. Mary Jane liked to bat it up in the air and let it fall among inexpert catchers. Her contemptuous “Aw, shucks!” announced a miss and her sudden laugh followed every hit. Nobody ever claimed the bat, if he caught the ball. She just knocked until she tired of it.

Mary Jane never talked in school. She just whispered very loudly and made numberless barefooted trips to the wastebasket. Soon she learned to be “ekscused” without Blanche.

We did not see our little visitor in November at all. It was too far and too cold. But she was there at Christmas with her round eyes rounder than usual.

“I'll come back when it's warm,” she promised, as I pulled her toboggan down over her ears. But she didn't come.

In January there was a measles epidemic. One Monday Blanche didn't come. The Musick children said that she and Mary Jane “had the measles”. Next day the Musick children were absent. At recess, Mr. Musick came to tell us that Mary Jane was dead.

We had classes the rest of the day. Nobody said anything about Mary Jane after the first few minutes. At recess, they batted the yellow ball as usual. Everybody clapped when I announced that school would be closed for three weeks, and after dismissal, there was a pushing, laughing race to the library in the corner to check out books for the “holiday” as they called it. They wrote their names on the library slips and dropped them on my desk as they passed.

Vernard had the big green Mother Goose book—the one that was too big for a little girl's lap. He tucked it under his arm awkwardly and ran out whistling. I kept on “checking out” books.

LAUGHTER

Salon

As laughter, careening from set face
To set face, touched the lips, the eyes
And facial nerves to expression
Of a mirthless satisfaction,
The air acquired refined noise of
Decently disciplined voices
And cultured merriment replete
With the void of the meaningless.

Shack

The great girth of his big belly
Shook until the floor whereon he stood
Quivered in every sliver; made
Prey to infectious vibrations
Of sincere geniality,
And to the coarse burst guffaws
Of unrestrained, raucous laughter
All who there together gathered.

BASKETBALL

INTERCOLLEGIATE SPORTS

BASKETBALL

Five Mountaineers take their places in the shadows of towering opponents. Lanky Joe Greene, who came up and filled the gap left by Captain Kelly Keith last year, tips the ball, and the game is on. Our boys scamper around. Four of them are seasoned men from last year, and have that speedy Gunkler-break down pat. Big Joe or Deyton takes the rebound, and like a meteor the ball flashes down the side—a long, back-handed hurl, perhaps from the clever hook of Happy Thomas, to Glen McDowell in the east corner. He is hemmed like a rabbit in a fence corner, but from some odd angle the ball escapes a forest of clamoring paws and sinks through the ring. Loud whistles—yells—Bass drum beats. As the applause subsides, Herby Sebren's sheep bell continues to tinkle from the band section. Mountaineers! That's a picture of them as they played their last game this season on the home floor with Union. They won. They gave us all a feeling of success. We saw our men, though out-reached and out-stood, play with fast, brotherly team work, and with the sportsmanship becoming Mountaineers. The ringing chimes and the torch dance through the streets afterward showed our enthusiasm.

With this spirit, the Blue and Whites played eleven games this year. They were victors in three of them. They finished ahead of Union, Louisville, Murray, and tied with Wesleyan for seventh place in the K.I.A.C. They fought valiantly in every game, whether it was won or lost, that "friendly rivalry and cooperation" to which Seabury Gymnasium is dedicated. Oscar Gunkler, Coach and Acting Physical Education Director, sustains that spirit in our boys through lean and fat years alike, and we know he will perpetuate it.

Five pals of the hardwood will turn in their shoes this year: Steadfast Oscar Deyton, dependable David Beldon, cunning Bartow Thomas, tricky Glen McDowell, and sweet Dallas Candy. McDowell garnered most points for the Gunklermen this season with 101. The captain was chosen at each game this year. Deyton, Beldon, and McDowell shared this honor.

We hate to see gaps made in the team but other men of service are left to wear the white suits next year. Powell, Massey, Prater, Hale, and Greene have all made a good showing in varsity competition. Coach also has outstanding frosh players who won four out of six games this year, to juggle into places in the Mountaineer squad.

CROSS COUNTRY

Most schools have lost interest in this lengthy run. This year our boys almost quit training because no one answered their challenge for a chase. However when the answer finally came from Mars Hill College way out in North Carolina, Captain John Caudill whistled up his pack and ran down there to defeat them 26-52. The team was comprised of Caudill, Clark, Scherrer, Felton, Pilson, Whitaker, Pacas.

TRACK

Interest has been spurred up in track in the last few years. Perhaps other colleges dislike to see Berea carry away the cup so consistently. The state meet last year saw four records shattered, so warm was the interest. Berea varsity easily took the tall trophy, but the frosh cup went to Western.

This year will surely be a heated fight for those awards. Centre, our jealous rival, is already predicting victory for the Colonels (so we are seeing by the papers). We expect a strong team to come out of the West from Bowling Green.

The Berea cinder agitators have been called out, and a host of lads reported. The blank places left by Settle, Pilson, and Brewer will be hard to fill. Coach Gunkler holds the stop watch and is getting results. The team will warm up this year by facing the classy University of Kentucky team, then two or three other encounters before going to the state meet at Centre. It is hard to predict what will be the outcome of that day, but Berea aims to bring the trophies home.

Faithful seniors to leave this year are: Captain Mayhew Clark, Roberts, Hirsch, Goforth, Morris, McCutcheon. They have run their laps and will clear the track for younger Mountaineers.

SWIMMING

The third year of intercollegiate swimming was finished with plenty of success. Records were set and re-set as University of Kentucky, Eastern and Berea teams plowed the ripples for points. Berea did not win either of their three individual meets, but came through for second place in the state meet.

Grant Begley from Hyden, Kentucky set the 200-yard free-style up two seconds to 2:46. He held the record in this event from last year only to have Lewis of University of Kentucky cut it from 2:50 to 2:48. Begley and Charlie Brooks, coaches at the water's edge, are to be graduated, leaving the distance swimming and the springboard crippled.

Members of the team were: Brooks, Begley, Felton, Headlev, McClure, McGuire, Hackett, Williams, Whitaker, and Wesley.

TENNIS

The tennis team last year won two of the four matches played. With the loss of Number One man, Edmund Durham, also Keith and McAfee, the racqueteers will need to swing a mean gut in order to come out in their scheduled appointments with the University of Kentucky and University of Cincinnati.

Members of the team will be: Brashear, Davis, Boyce, Lav, Jones, Williams, Brooks, Hale, Prater. Six of these men are to be graduated.

Best in the long run!

As authorized distributor for Williams Ice-O-Matic I am naturally proud of the fine record that has been established by Ice-O-Matic Installations in Berea College. I am equally proud of the manufacturing methods that make it possible for Ice-O-Matic to furnish equally satisfactory and dependable performance for every cooling need.

There is a reason for Ice-O-Matic's long life and carefree performance. Both are the result of high quality materials, fashioned by precision methods into the smooth-running sturdy Ice-O-Matic Compressor.
